WHAT'S YOUR STORY

As many of us who live, work, and go to school in Wyandotte know, we are a very tight-knit community with a long, proud history. Often times, these histories cross paths and are intertwined with one another even though we are raised in different families. Chances are, your parents went to Roosevelt, maybe your grandparents, and in some cases, even your great-grandparents went to our school!

Wyandotte, Downriver, and Detroit are communities with very rich cultural histories. For those of us who live here, those histories are our stories; the stories of our families and how people like them lived their lives: what they prioritized, what they celebrated, what they felt sorrow over, what tore them apart and what ultimately brought them together into the communities we now live in. Wouldn't you like to know more?

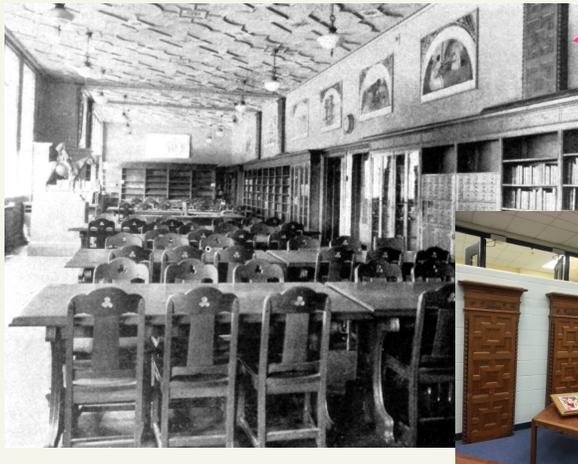

Mrs. Z has recently ordered over 20 books on local Wyandotte, Downriver, and Detroit history. Please come browse these books. Maybe you will find a face you recognize in a picture or a name you know in the book. After all, these are the stories written by your families. They are merely edited by the authors.

OAK COLUMNS GET AN UPDATE

A BIG THANK YOU to Mr. Hinderer and some of his Wood Tech students. They cut and stained some much needed caps for the top of the oak columns in the LMC.

The columns were open and hollow in the center so, they were collecting a lot of dust, garbage, and the occasional $20 bill inside of them. That's not a joke. Someone actually dropped $20 inside of one but, Mrs. Z retrieved it. I apologize to all of you treasure hunters out there.

So, what are these columns and where did they come from anyway?

Believe it or not, they are the original, hand carved columns created as ornamental decoration for the top of the bookcases in the 1923 RHS library as pictured to the left. Pretty amazing, right?

Thanks again to Mr. Hinderer for helping to care for one of our little pieces of Wyandotte history.

Don't go yet! There's more.

Mrs. Z will need help with the Book Fair. Let her know if you are interested.

Summer is coming up fast! Are you in a panic about what to do without access to all of our great books in the LMC?

Have no fear! A special
Buy One, Get one FREE Book Fair
